

Patient Letter to the WH Initiative on Women's Health Research

To whom it may concern:

We are writing to you as patients with chronic vulvovaginal and pelvic pain conditions, including pelvic floor dysfunction, vulvodynia, lichen sclerosus, and other common conditions. We welcome the recent announcement of the White House Initiative on Women's Health Research and want to ensure that chronic vulvovaginal and pelvic pain is included as a top priority.

We know you will be hearing from medical providers, researchers, and experts in the field of vulvovaginal and pelvic pain. As patients, we want to provide context and share our experiences to demonstrate why this research is so crucial.

Chronic vulvovaginal pain is an extremely prevalent condition, affecting 1 in every 4 women in the United States. Yet this widespread medical condition is also severely underfunded and little understood, with research funding in this area amounting to only 33 cents per affected patient. Our pain and our lives are worth more than 33 cents apiece. Many of us have spent years, if not decades, searching for pain relief and care. Every day, the lack of effective treatment options impacts our abilities to live full pain-free lives. We, as patients, are the ones who pay the price for the gap in research.

These conditions affect our productivity at work and at school; sexual, mental, and reproductive health, romantic and sexual relationships; sleep, sitting, and standing; the clothes that we wear; and our ability to function and go about our daily lives. Many of us have had excruciatingly painful experiences in medical settings, leading us to avoid routine and necessary medical appointments (e.g., pap smears, pelvic exams). For some of us, the daily pain is debilitating and all-consuming. And because these conditions are so stigmatized, the experience of living with them is especially isolating. It is no surprise to us that 12-33% of female chronic pelvic pain patients develop major depression.

Nearly all of us struggled to be diagnosed and treated, going to doctor after doctor and trying treatment after treatment for years. Some of us still lack a diagnosis and even more of us have found no adequate treatment to manage our pain. Many of the commonly prescribed treatments have not been thoroughly researched or studied in clinical trials. The lack of scientific evidence leaves us to make high-stakes medical decisions and endure expensive and painful procedures with little information on whether the treatment will work.

Chronic vulvovaginal and pelvic pain is highly prevalent in all populations in the United States. Yet, racialized, marginalized patient populations, including Black, Indigenous, People of Color (BIPOC), sexual and gender minorities, low-income and/or low-resourced individuals, and other groups made vulnerable by stigma and discrimination are often unable to access diagnosis or treatment and bear the greatest burdens of healthcare inequities. We know first-hand the time, money, and resources it requires to see a specialist and to get a diagnosis. Care for vulvovaginal and pelvic pain should not only be available to white and wealthy patients. Every person in pain should be able to access the care and treatments they need.

Given these concerns, we urge you to add “chronic vulvovaginal and pelvic pain” as a critical area for research funding, recognition, and study. We appreciate that endometriosis has been identified as a key condition deserving of study, and want to ensure that other similarly-prevalent chronic genito-pelvic pain conditions receive their due attention and research. This includes the categories of chronic pelvic pain, generalized vulvodynia, localized vulvodynia, vulvovaginal and vulvar dermatoses, and all conditions listed in the letter from medical providers<sup>1</sup>.

We also ask that your research committee include representation from experts in the field of vulvovaginal and pelvic pain, including from the International Society for the Study of Women’s Sexual Health (ISSWSH), International Society for the Study of Vulvovaginal Disease (ISSVD), and the International Pelvic Pain Society (IPPS).

Finally, we would like you to consider the massive stigma associated with these conditions, and what each signature means. Behind each signature is a person identifying themselves as suffering from a very intimate medical condition that most people would rather keep private. We are willing to identify ourselves in the hopes that you will hear and listen to us. For us and for those like us, obtaining research funding for these conditions is of the utmost importance and urgency.

Thank you for your consideration of this matter. We are grateful for the work you are doing to close the gaps in women’s health research.
